Thomas Church, Landscape Architect
Designing a Modern California Landscape

Thomas Church defined the domestic landscape of the postwar United States. This book is a pioneering work that explores the many dimensions of Church's contributions to landscape architecture, including his writings and designs. Four experts in the field; Daniel Gregory, Dianne Harris, Dorothee Imbert, and Marc Treib present his story as a mosaic of works and images. These experts balance applause with criticism and scholarship with writing that both the professional and general reader will appreciate. Using documentation in the Environmental Design Archives at UC Berkeley, the book presents many Church drawings never before published.
